

THINK MINERS HAVE CHANCE OF AN ESCAPE

Probably Walled Themselves
Off From Gas and Fire
After Explosion

MORE THAN 70 TRAPPED

Rescue Crews Re-Enter Under
Leadership of R. M. Lambie,
The Mine Chief

FAIRMONT, W. Va., May 2 (I.N.S.)—Spurred to action by the faint hope that the entombed miners may have been able to wall themselves off from the fire and gas that followed in the wake of the terrific explosion, rescue crews under the leadership of R. M. Lambie, West Virginia mine chief, re-entered the Federal No. 3, mine of the New England Fuel and Transportation Co., 19 miles from here, today.

"There is a chance they may come out alive," Lambie told newspapermen as his helmeted rescue crews, hardened for the unpleasant task before them by countless other mine disasters, re-entered the slope. "And so long as there is a chance of bringing them out alive, no effort will be spared."

Sixteen men are dead, seven others are in hospitals and either 77 or 78 other miners are trapped behind the curtain of fire, which mine experts now are certain broke out following the explosion.

Lambie's spirit was reflected among the rescue crews who have waited, indefatigable, at the mine mouth for the order to go in again in search of the unfortunate miners. Rescue operations were suspended late yesterday pending the arrival of further supplies with which to combat the fire and gas.

All through the night from 2,000 to 3,000 relatives and friends of the trapped men maintained a ceaseless vigil on the hillsides across the cement-rimmed mine mouth.

Upon the success or failure of the rescue crews depends the fate of many families represented in that mournful group, but they waited patiently with the sincere hope that providence will give them back their husbands and fathers, despite the seemingly overwhelming odds against the men being rescued alive.

They did not weep, for they are the wives and children of miners, who are taught from childhood to be prepared to meet such emergencies without faltering.

The mine is one of the largest in Monongalia county. It is located four miles off the main road from Morgantown to Fairmont. The nearest railroad is two miles away and only one telephone, a party line, serves the vicinity of the mine.

MORRISVILLE HOT ON FIRE SITUATION

Councilmen Balk on Question Of Sending Apparatus To Surrounding Villages

MANY CALLS RECEIVED

MORRISVILLE, May 2.—Because of the very large percentage of fire calls received by the Morrisville Fire Department coming from outside districts, the Common Council is considering some method by which the taxpayers of Morrisville Borough may receive more of the benefits for which they pay their tax. The recent action of the firemen in permitting every piece of apparatus to be taken out of the borough, thereby leaving the property in Morrisville unprotected, brought this matter to a head recently.

The councilmen argue that the taxpayers of Morrisville are supporting the fire companies and are entitled to protection at all times. When all the apparatus go out of the borough it is argued the country districts are receiving the protection while the residents of Morrisville, who pay for the maintenance of the fire department and the purchase of the apparatus, are left unprotected.

One of the councilmen in discussing the matter said that the time is not far off when property owners living in Fallsington and other country districts will be required to pay a stipulated amount to have a fire apparatus brought to a fire. It is also said that the Morrisville firemen respond to the country fires and save thousands of dollars but they are not paid a cent toward the wear and tear of the apparatus, while the taxpayers of Morrisville are required to pay it all. It was also reported that Morrisville firemen endeavor to have Fallsington organize a company of its own but this has not been accomplished. One councilman expressed his displeasure at the attitude of some of the Fallsington people, who say they do not need a fire department since they can have the Morrisville firemen with their apparatus within five or six minutes. It is argued that if Fallsington and the remainder of the township is going to depend upon Morrisville for protection of the property owners they should pay something toward the maintenance of the department. Seventy-five percent of the calls are from the country districts and the mileage the machines must travel many times greater than they travel to a fire in the borough, it is said. It is also held that traveling to a fire in the country over the rough roads does a great deal more damage to a heavy apparatus than traveling over the paved streets of the borough.

JOHN K. YOUNG DIES; IN BUSINESS HERE 44 YEARS

Deceased Was Active Church Worker In Bristol For Many Years

WAS VERY WELL LIKED

Had Host of Friends Who Held Him in Very High Esteem

John Kroesen Young died at his residence, 559 Bath street, Saturday night at 11 o'clock, after an illness of but a few weeks. Mr. Young had not been in the best of health for quite some time, but was incapacitated only during the past few weeks.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the late residence of the deceased. Interment will be in Bristol Cemetery.

Mr. Young was born in Jacksonville, Northampton Township, Bucks County, June 22, 1848. His father, Joseph Keith Young, was a shoemaker. His mother was Jane Brown Young.

Mr. Young received his earlier education in the public schools of Northampton Township. Later he attended Tennyson School at Hartsville, Pa.

He had a great ambition to become a druggist, and he selected as an early tutor one of the foremost physicians and druggists of his day, Dr. John DeLacey, whose establishment was located at Fourth and South streets, Philadelphia. He was then 17 years of age. While working for Dr. DeLacey, Mr. Young entered Philadelphia College of Pharmacy.

In 1868 Dr. DeLacey died. Mr. Young then connected with the drug firm of James P. Milnor at Sixth and Lombard streets, Philadelphia. He continued his pharmaceutical course until 1873, when he was graduated.

A full-fledged pharmacist, he remained with the Milnor concern until 1882, when he opened his own shop at 55 Bath street, now known as 557 Bath street, which is next door to his last location. He had operated his drug store at the old address for 15 years when he moved to 557 Bath street, where he had been for the past 23 years.

In 1870 Mr. Young married Virginia Rayer, daughter of Lewis Rayer, of Philadelphia. Two children were born of that marriage. Laura May, who died at the tender age of one and one-half years, and Horace G. Young. Mrs. Young died in 1903.

Mr. Young, in 1908, married Susan M. Scott, daughter of Joseph Winfield Scott, of Bristol Township. The couple had one child born to them, Virginia, now a senior in Bristol High School.

Outside of his business, which was closest to his heart, Mr. Young liked gardening. He had a large plot at his late home, 40x200, which he delighted in improving with flowers and vegetables.

At one time Mr. Young took a keen interest in politics. He was a Democrat politically. He was elected to the school board and served as a member of that body for 18 years, during which time he was associated with the late William H. Booz, Edward H. Foster and John K. Wildman. He also served as County Auditor for three years.

When the first board of health was organized in Bristol, Mr. Young was invited to become a member.

Without any effort on his part, his Democratic friends unknown to him in 1900, nominated him for Burgess and he made a good race, being defeated by only 300 votes. His successful opponent was Raymond Buseman.

Mr. Young's candidacy seemingly had its good effect for the next two Burgess were Democrats.

Aside from these various activities, Mr. Young was very active in church work. He was treasurer of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 37 years.

He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Philadelphia Lodge, No. 3; Knights of Pythias, Philadelphia Lodge, No. 76; Knights of The Mystic Chain of Bristol and the Fathers' Association of Bristol High School. He was a Past Grand of the Odd Fellows, and in 1881 and 1882 he was his lodge's representative to the Grand Lodge conventions at Harrisburg and Reading.

His widow, daughter and son survive.

Church Witnessed By 400 People

BOYS PARTICIPATE

Musical Numbers Also Feature

About 150 boys of all ages formed part of the audience of 400 which gathered in the Presbyterian Church, here, last evening to participate in the union service which marked the opening of activities for Boys' Week.

The edifice was filled with members from all churches of the town, with the pastors of the various congregations seated in the pulpit.

The Rev. Andrew George Solla, pastor of the Presbyterian Chapel of Our Saviour (Italian), delivered a most impressive discourse on the text, "The Boy Jesus Grew in Wisdom, Stature, and in Favor with God and Man," taken from the fifth chapter of Luke's Gospel.

The speaker wove a splendid talk around the four-fold life, urging that the boys follow the pattern of Christ, endeavoring to grow mentally, physically, socially and spiritually. He especially asked that they take part in religious activities and give time to church attendance.

The meeting was added to by the presence of the Sunday School orchestra of St. James's Episcopal Church, which gave a pleasing selection. Other musical numbers were: Organ prelude, "Triumphant March," offertory, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and postlude, "Recessional March," by Mrs. M. D. Weagley; vocal solo, "Consider and Hear Me" (Wooler), Mrs. C. I. The other ministers in attendance also participated in the service, the scripture reading being given by the Rev. John Ellery, pastor of the Methodist Church; prayer offered by the Rev. Henry Stuart Paynter, rector of St. James's Episcopal Church; benediction pronounced by the Rev. Howard L. Zepp, pastor of the First Baptist Church. The Rev. Paul R. Ronge and Rev. Henry M. ### THE AIRPLANE IS A "COMER"

Air science received its greatest forward impulse because of a capacity for destruction. During four years of its infancy the world was engaged in hostilities in which its adaptability to purposes of war was immediately and strikingly apparent. Hence armies and navies have been the plane's most diligent sponsors.

While these services still interest themselves in the perfection of aircraft, there are signs that the constructive capacities of planes are rapidly becoming apparent, and that the impetus for further development of the science will be furnished not alone by fighting forces but by civilians in pursuits of peace. The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce summarizes a few of its constructive works:

Postal service planes carrying mail from coast to coast on regular schedule in little more than a day. Passenger services in various parts of the country. Experimental trans-oceanic flights in contemplation. Timber patrol work in Oregon and California, expected to save thousands of acres of valuable woodland from destruction by fire. In Canada, planes equipped with special fire-fighting apparatus have already been employed successfully in combating forest fires.

Coast guard air patrols. Geodetic Survey experiments in re-mapping sections of the coastline by air photography. Scientific studies of fishery from the air by observers and cameramen of the Smithsonian Institution. Work of the Bureau of Entomology in collaboration with the army air service in scattering insecticide over valuable lands in Ohio and other localities, and the use of dirigibles in the same work in New England orchards. In Louisiana, experiments last summer lead to a conclusion that the boll weevil may be exterminated eventually by the employment of insecticide dropped from planes over plantations.

Reared under the unhappy auspices of war it is encouraging to know that the plane's capacity for constructive labor is being exploited rapidly, and that its development tomorrow depends no more on its utility in war than on its value as a unique instrument toward the greater safety and prosperity of mankind in peace.

The weather forecaster has lots of competition.

Bootlegging pays fairly good money after you work up to where you can start a drug store.

The next generation may have no natural resources to exploit, but there always will be suckers to trim.

You just simply can't teach an onion to hold its breath.

It's nice to think people are better than you know they are.

Girls do not have to faint any more to attract attention.

Few persons do enough of it to become weary in well-doing.

The modern reformer would like to assume an indicatorship over mankind.

Not every man who reaches the top of the ladder is able to retain his balance.

Echoes of the Past

Items of Interest as Gleaned from old files of Bucks County Newspapers

Thirty-five years ago the following items were published in the Newtown Enterprise, under date of April 30, 1892.

A woman dentist had located in Bristol and there was talk of one starting in Yardley.

The millinery store of Mary J. Townsend in Hultmeville was broken into and robbed of about $100 worth of goods.

A red oak tree, over 5 feet in diameter, was recently cut in the field of Joseph White, in Falls. Lumber from such trees was very valuable, being a fashionable wood for furniture.

William S. Gross, son of Abraham C. Gross, of Plumstead township, was attacked by a savage bull. The young man's cries brought his father with a pitchfork, at sight of which the bull started to run away.

On the 22nd inst. the building committee of George School was appointed as follows: George Watson, Edmund Webster, William P. Bancroft, Robert L. Pyle, Emmor Roberts, Matilda Garrigues and Susan W. Lipincott. It was thought that the school would be under roof at an early day. All these friends are now deceased.

Bucks First-day School Union met in Buckingham meeting house on Seventh-day, the 23rd inst. Reports of First-day schools were read. ### CHAPTER I

"It isn't a fit way for a decent man to make a living!"

Bob Ward, as sincere as stubborn, and as humble as handsome, made no conscious or deliberate effort to achieve a dramatic effect. But he was so vitally young and lusty, so alive and good-natured and real, that to his two college chums it seemed inconceivable to hear from his lips anything that smacked of moralizing. Their howls of derision rent the un-academic air of a University Heights boarding house.

Unaffected, undeterred, Bob spoke on quietly:

"I mean it fellows! I really don't think it's a fit, or fair, or honorable thing for a chap to make a living by acting as a clandestine escort for cheating wives!"

Once again the shabby room resounded to the unrestrained expression of the animal spirits of Fred Towers and Arch Sellen. Arch pressed his floating ribs in genuine distress.

"Oh, Bob, you old gluepot, please cut it out!" he begged. "Or you'll have to buy me a new set of buttons for this vest!"

"Yea, Bob," gasped Freddy, suffering even more acutely, "honest, if you uncork another one of those platitudes, and keep that Model Young Man look on your mug an instant longer, I'll just up and bust, that's all!"

Bob grinned good-humoredly. "Well, I'm glad you crackbrains find me amusing."

"Amusing? Onions! We're laughing at you, son, the same way we'd laugh at undertaker ads. It ain't what you say, but how you say it, and how you look!"

"Be that as it may," rejoined Bob, pleasantly, but firm and not at all in a bantering mood, "but I don't want my sheepskin, my engineering degree, to be tainted by that their husbands would be glad to give you an income for life if you'd take 'em and keep 'em. Honest, all you've got to do is wrestle these withered dames around for the afternoon—and draw down your fifty bucks every week. And, believe me, it's worth fifty times fifty dollars to even stand close enough to some of these polka old female wrecks to dance with them!"

The boys came close to Bob now, to plead with him. He relaxed, fidgeted, stared at them with an expression that was at once grateful and thoughtful but obdurate.

"I'm sorry, fellows," he said slowly, "because Lord knows I need the work and the money."

Fifty dollars a week looks big as a house to me. But I just can't see my way clear to fattening my stomach and wallet at the expense of my self-respect. No offense, fellows, of course," he added hastily, noting the shades of resentment on his chums' faces. "because, you see, it's all in the way a fellow looks at things. You two birds philosophize about it, and don't think it's at all out of the way. Therefore, it isn't—for you. But I just can't bring myself to look at it in an offhand manner. Well, I'm registered at the University Employment Bureau, and as a member of the football squad things are made kind of easy for me. Little jobs thrown my way. You know. But these no more than cover my books and laundry and incidentals. Here I am, with graduation only a month off, not a dollar saved to pay for clothes or a railroad ticket to some place where I can practise my min- ing engineering—and right now, six weeks behind in my board bill to Mrs. O'Sully. Gosh, fellows, you can see that I'm in a desperate fix, and that I wouldn't turn the job down unless I had pretty strong convictions about it! Honest, I'm

"Unless you pay up by this coming Saturday, out you go!"

the knowledge that I earned it through helping married women to get vicarious thrills!"

"Now I'm sure you're making a mistake to study engineering," taunted Arch. "You're out out for an actor. A tank town trouper, whose virtuous ankles never trip on temptation—on the stage. Whose chaste eyes see only the gold behind the digger—on the stage. Whose—"

"Aw, lay off, before I drop you out the window!" Bob uncoiled his six-foot-two frame of football bone and muscle—two hundred and ten pounds, in the aggregate—from a decent armchair and clutched for his tormentors.

Fred and Arch, who knew the potency of those big hands, and the fair ability of their husky possessor to make good his threat on them, one at a time or together, dodged to safety, and resorted to argument.

"You big saphead, you're in hock up to your ears, and behind in your tuition payments. How in Hannab can you afford to turn down this job?" stormed Fred, earnest now.

"This job," put in Arch, "that we were big-hearted enough to get for an ungrateful bull cow life you!"

"Yea, a foolish move that'll probably cost us our jobs—when you flop those brick scows of yours on the floor of the Inn. Madame Leonine will think we've brought her a baby boxcar instead of a dancing entertainer!"

"But can't you lounge lazards get it into your sponge cake heads that I'm telling you I don't want to be a dancing entertainer?"

"Why not, noble knight," mocked Arch. "Some of our very best students are such. Like me and Freddy, for instance—"

"Seriously, Bob," broke in Freddy, "there's nothing wrong in it. Really, I wouldn't want to do it any more than you, if there was. You know, I come from one of those old-fashioned small town families myself. You needn't worry about these ladies who come to the Inn being straying wives. Most of 'em are so old and ugly sorry, I want a job—but not just that kind of a job!"

"Him!" It was a new voice. A most unattractive voice. A human version of the Kilkenny sounds that float up from dark alleys and back fences of nights to break the slumber of the just. A belligerent, sarcastic voice. The voice, no less, of Mrs. Roberta Emmet O'Sully, the boys' landlady. Unbeknown to them, unnoticed in their absorption in the tale of Bob's financial woes, she had stealthily opened the door and stepped into the room in time to hear most of Bob's frank avowal of viewpoint and confession of abject poverty. Sympathy was not in the position of Mrs. O'Sully's business and dunning methods. Only one thing about Bob's little speech stuck in her mind: "So it's turning down a job, you are. And you own' me money these many weeks, and me lettin' you stay on in the softness of me heart because I believed you when you said you were tryin' to get work, but couldn't. And now I hear you turn down fifty dollars—Saints be!—a week, because you think you're too good for the work, or something. Though it's not too good you are to exp a poor, hardworking lady of her lawful money—"

"Now, Mrs. Sully, please—" Bob was genuinely distressed.

But she hushed him with an imperious gesture. "It seems to me, young man, that any kind of work that will make it possible for you to pay your debts would be honorable enough work for the likes of you. I'm sure if it's good enough for these young gentlemen—" she beamed upon Arch and Freddy, who were paid up—"it's good enough for you."

Mrs. O'Sully's face grew coarse and hard as she turned her little eyes upon Bob again, and shook a finger under his nose. "Unless you pay up by this coming Saturday, out you go!"

She gave Bob no chance to parley or plead, but turned and stamp- ed angrily out of the room. There was grim foreboding in the frown of her broad hips.

Bob's face was tragic, hopeless. (To be continued)

RIVERSIDE THEATRE

Blasco Ibanez is the author of "Mare Nostrum," coming to the Riverside Theatre tonight. This brilliant and internationally famous Spaniard is the most discussed and widely read of present day novelists. His works are translated into almost every known language and his books run into many editions in all the leading countries of the world.

Besides "Mare Nostrum" Ibanez is the author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Blood and Sand," "Enemias of Women," "Queen Calafia" and many other books and short stories. He is also contributor to magazines and newspapers in the United States, France, Spain and England.

Ibanez considers "Mare Nostrum" his greatest story and it is the favorite of all he has written. One of the reasons for this is that in "Mare Nostrum" Ibanez retraces himself as a boy with all his youthful aspirations and his overpowering love for the sea. Because of his great personal interest in "Mare Nostrum" Ibanez refused to dispose of the motion picture rights until Rex Ingram was able to produce it in pictures. Ingram and Ibanez have been close friends and mutual admirers since Ingram produced "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which made motion picture history.

Red Cross Needs $5,000,000 For Flood Victims; Mobilizes All Relief Resources at Memphis

1. "Main Street" in one of the 32 refugee camps established by the Red Cross is shown in the upper photo. In the foreground two helpless victims of the merciless waters are shown inspecting their new quarters.

2. A group of refugees receiving food from a Red Cross canteen worker. Mass feeding such as this has been necessary in some camps to be avoided wherever possible.

3. Acting Chairman James L. Fieser of the Red Cross who is assisting the administration of relief from base headquarters at Memphis, Tennessee.

WITH more than 100,000 persons already homeless and the mighty Mississippi threatening each instant to tear its way through additional towns in the one-time happy valley, the American Red Cross finds itself face to face with probably the greatest relief problem of the past century.

The President of the United States has actively participated in mobilizing governmental agencies and resources to assist the Red Cross in its relief program. On April 22, following the custom in previous disasters of the first magnitude, he issued a proclamation calling upon the people to subscribe to the Red Cross relief fund. This he did in his capacity as President of the United States and President also of the Red Cross. He followed this action with the appointment of a special committee from his Cabinet, comprising Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War; Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy; Herbert C. Hoover,

Secretary of Commerce, and Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, to work in conjunction with Red Cross officials. At the first meeting of this committee with the Red Cross acting chairman, James L. Fieser, and others, it was decided that a minimum of $5,000,000 will be needed to take care of the flood sufferers.

The disaster was reported to exceed in proportions the Florida hurricane of last fall, when the roster of homeless was 80,000. It differs in that there is huge total of dead and wounded. In this case, however, there is no definitely cut out problem as in Florida, for the elements have not finished their havoc. Whether the waters will start to recede within a few weeks or whether they will continue to rise indefinitely, sweeping additional houses down to the sea and engulfing additional acres of farmlands and villages, cannot be foreseen.

Henry M. Baker, national director of disaster relief for the Red Cross, has been made dictator of the Mississippi Valley with the powers of a general in war. Headquarters of the relief corps is at Memphis, Tenn., where liaison officers of the Army, Navy, Commerce Department, Coast Guard, Public Health Service and Veterans' Bureau are working in conjunction with Mr. Fieser, Secretary Hoover, Major General Jadwin, chief of army engineers, and Dr. William R. Redden, medical advisor for the Red Cross in Memphis, to assist in the gigantic program.

Relief funds are beginning to come in to National Red Cross headquarters in Washington and to chapter headquarters in every state and all that it is humanly possible to do is being done for the refugees. Quotas have been assigned to the chapters and 3,000 of these are collecting funds. Prior to leaving for Memphis, Chairman Fieser expressed his belief that the American people will respond generously to the appeal for the flood sufferers.

Voices

The day is full of voices—meaningless, insistent. They drone upon the street, chatter at parties, hurl snatches of themselves at you from passing automobiles, rise up and down dramatically from open-air platforms, end with question marks at the office, trail after you on street cars. . . . Your ears, forever open, almost have to hear.

Yet in this same room with you are voices of utmost silence, whose every word concerns you. You control them more surely than you control telephone or radio. Open a page—they talk to you quietly. Close a page—they are through. They are the voices of the advertisements. They talk direct to you. Tell of better roofing for your home, more protective paint for its walls. Shoes your youngsters can't scuffle out easily. Salads, delicious drinks, to gratify you. Reinforced hosiery, cooler underwear, purer soaps. You believe in these voices, for they have to be sincere. Else they would not be in these pages—could not have the nation's belief. You buy the goods they proffer, for you know already what those goods will do. And wide belief has lowered their prices. They are economical—sure!

Loose products everywhere in stores are crying out, "Buy me!" But behind the voice of the advertised product is the voice of authority. The voice that tells the why, what, when, where and how of the goods you buy.
